

Are you a young person in a child abuse or neglect case

in Juvenile Court?

You should have a

G-A-L lawyer.

THE JUVENILE COURT MUST HIRE A LAWYER FOR YOU.

Your lawyer is called your Guardian Ad Litem or G-A-L.

Your G-A-L

- works for you - not for the judge, not for DCS, not for your parents.
- must listen to your ideas and what you want.
- should make sure the judge knows what you want and need.
- This should happen before the judge decides anything about you.
- should make sure you are healthy, safe and getting what you need.

Your G-A-L should tell you:

- Your rights
- What he or she can do for you
- What is happening with your case
- How and why things happen in Juvenile Court
- When and where they will have hearings and meetings
- What to expect from a hearing or meeting
- What a decision made at a hearing or meeting means to you.

Your G-A-L should help you get ready for court and important meetings.

This means your G-A-L should:

- Listen to what you want and need
- Meet with people who know you well (parents, family, foster parents, teachers, ministers, coaches, etc.) If it would help you, your G-A-L should make them come to hearings or meetings
- Tell you about hearings and meetings and make sure you come
- Meet with you to plan together. You should meet before hearings and foster care review board meetings. You should meet before child and family team meetings (CFTMs).
- Explain anything the judge or others will use to make decisions about you. This includes court papers and reports.
- Help you practice what you want to say in court or in meetings.

Your G-A-L should help you tell your side in court and in meetings.

This means your G-A-L should:

- Speak up for you
- Help you speak up for yourself
- Help explain how you see things, how you feel, and what you worry about
- Call witnesses to speak on your side
- Ask other witnesses questions

Are you going into DCS custody? Then your G-A-L should help you get what you need.

- Your G-A-L should make sure your permanency plan is right for you. Do you want to live with family or friends? Do you want to live in a foster home instead of a group home? Your G-A-L should help you get the placement that is right for you.
- Do you want to visit family and friends regularly and often? Then your G-A-L should make sure you can.
- Do you want to make regular calls to family and friends? Then your G-A-L should make sure you can.
- Your G-A-L should help you get services like education, health care, and good counseling.
- Were you the victim of a crime? Then your G-A-L should see if you can get money (victim's compensation).

Your G-A-L should make the system work for you.

Here are some examples:

- Are you waiting too long to find out where you will live?
- Are you waiting too long for you or your family to get help? Then, your G-A-L should speed things up.
- Do you think the Judge or DCS made the wrong decision about you? Your G-A-L can appeal. Then a different judge will look at your case.
- Not getting enough visits or phone calls from family and friends? Not getting regular visits from your case manager? Then your G-A-L should help you get your visits and phone calls.

Will my G-A-L look at my juvenile court file, my DCS file, and other records about me?

Yes. Your G-A-L needs to know what people say about you and your family. Your G-A-L should get copies of any important reports and records.

Will my G-A-L show me and talk to me about these reports and records?

In most cases, yes. Your G-A-L should make sure you understand the reports and records. Your G-A-L should make sure the reports and records are right. Is your judge going to read any reports or records about you? Then most of the time you have a right to read them too. What if the judge thinks it would harm you to read a report or record? Then the judge can order the G-A-L not to share that part with you.

How can I make it easier for my G-A-L to help me?

Tell your G-A-L the truth about your feelings and what's going on.

Having problems? Tell your G-A-L so you can get help.

Don't understand something?

Ask your G-A-L to explain it. Keep your G-A-L's name and phone number with you. Stay in touch with your G-A-L.

What if my G-A-L says what I want would not be good for me?

Here's an example: You want to go back home. But your G-A-L says you should stay in foster care.

Then you and your G-A-L should have a long talk. Your G-A-L should be sure what you want and should think about it. Does the G-A-L have serious worries about what you want? Then your G-A-L will tell you why.

What if you and your G-A-L still don't agree? Then your G-A-L should speak up for what you want.

Or, the G-A-L should ask the judge to find you a different lawyer. This new lawyer should speak up for what you want.

How do I know if my G-A-L is doing a good job for me?

Ask yourself these questions. If your answer is yes, your G-A-L is doing a good job.

- Does your G-A-L spend time getting to know you?
- Does your G-A-L explain what is going on with your case?
- Does your G-A-L give you a chance to say what you are feeling?
- Does your G-A-L ask what you want to happen? For example, does your G-A-L ask if you want to see your family more? Or, do you want to live with relatives? Or, are you getting to see your friends?
- Does your G-A-L speak up for you in court and in meetings?
- Does your G-A-L keep in touch with you by visiting, calling or writing to you?
- Can you call your G-A-L when you have a problem or question?
- Does your G-A-L try to help you with problems?

What if I don't think my G-A-L is doing a good job?

Was your answer to the questions "no"? Tell your G-A-L how you feel and why.

Still think your G-A-L is not doing a good job? Then ask the judge for a new G-A-L.
